

2014 Crime Statistics Continue To Show Decline in Greenbelt

by James Giese

Of recent, stories about Greenbelt crime statistics resemble a broken phonograph record (if you know or remember what they are). Remember how the needle would jump back on the track and continually repeat itself until you did something to stop it? Well the same is true in recent years of crime statistic reports. But, unlike the bad record, hopefully no one will do anything to stop the repetitive reports on the number of crimes being committed within the city. For over five years straight, crime has dropped in Greenbelt but who doesn't want to hear that again?

Overall the number of Class I crimes, which are the most serious kind, were more than seven percent fewer than in the previous year. That's just about the same rate of decrease that has occurred on average over the past five years. Better yet, crimes against persons (murder, rape, robbery and aggravated assault) have dropped by over 13 percent, again pretty much on course with the five year average. That means that since 2009, the number of crimes against persons has been cut in half.

While not quite as good, the number of crimes against property (breaking and entering, larceny and motor vehicle theft) dropped by more than six percent in 2014 as compared to 2013 and by over 34 percent as compared to 2009.

Over the past five years, the number of robberies and aggravated assaults each decreased by 57 percent, breaking and enterings by 39 percent, larcenies by 30 percent and motor vehicle thefts by 49 percent. That's 72 fewer robberies, 34 fewer assaults, 82 fewer home and business incursions, 246 fewer larcenies and 82 fewer vehicles stolen in a year's time.

Bad News

While the incidents of murder and rape are too small in number to determine meaningful trends, the numbers for the past year were contrary to the general crime trend. The first reported murder in four years occurred in Greenbelt East. However, more than five years ago it was common to have more than one such incident each year. Of somewhat greater concern was the doubling in number of rapes from five to 10, comparing 2014 to 2013. The 2014 number was also the greatest since 2010 when there were 11 during the year. Eight of the rapes in 2014 occurred in Franklin Park and one each in Greenbelt Center and Greenbelt East.

Greenbelt West still accounts for almost half of all city crime, but for the past year the number of crimes dropped by nine percent, a better drop than the citywide average. Also, the number of crimes committed in the

by Rachel Kuipers

NASA's Goddard Space Flight Center (GSFC) campus is undergoing updates to become more efficient and environmentally friendly, GSFC representatives told the Greenbelt City Council.

GSFC Director Chris Scolese and Deputy Director Ray Rubilotta joined council on March 2 for a worksession on plans they have for the campus and a discussion of current and future projects.

Rubilotta said GSFC is trying to reach a "net zero status," meaning they are aiming for a net energy consumption level of zero. They will do so by making buildings more energy efficient and increasing their usage of renewable energy resources. Current regulations require 35 percent of the energy used to be from renewable resources, he said.

The federal mandate now includes an initiative called Freeze the Footprint that looks at how many square feet an agency has and does not allow them to exceed that, Rubilotta said. "From here on out, any time we build new, we're going to have to also have a contingency plan to knock down old. That way we don't just keep growing all the way."

In addition to moving toward net zero with new buildings, the materials from structures GSFC demolishes are recycled. Only about 10 percent of materials from a recent demolition was not recyclable, Rubilotta said.

GSFC is also planning to keep vehicle use to a minimum, he said. "We believe that based on the number of people we have on Center and for the foreseeable future, we have adequate parking."

Vibrant Program

GSFC has a vibrant bike program that complements the walking atmosphere of the campus, Rubilotta said. "We have about 45 bicycles that the Center maintains. They're located throughout the Center. There's a heavy cost initially but they're low maintenance; they have no chains and the tires are tubeless."

GSFC also offers a service called Goddard Taxi that will transport visitors and employees around the campus so they don't have to move their vehicles.

"It's really a robust time here right now and our construction is just about finished," said Rubilotta. GSFC shipping and receiving facility will be completed in March, allowing them to discontinue using their older warehouse.

He added that the new Flights Projects building will be completed between June and August and they will be able to demolish just under 300,000 gross square feet of older buildings to maintain their Freeze the Footprint requirements.

"One of the big projects that we did this year is we spent millions of dollars to re-stripe and repave the roadway," Rubilotta said. "Since I have been in my position, it's been at least 15 years since we did such a major undertaking. About 30 percent of the Center, in dire need of repair, was actually repaved and restriped."

Future Goals

Scolese emphasized the future of GSFC regarding goals as well as projects. "Today I have a

Joanie Cohen-Mitchell Loves Her Job and Her Life Here

by Alexi Worley

Joanie Cohen-Mitchell, clasping a mug of warm tea between her hands, curled up on her cushion-covered living room couch in her home in Greenbelt beside her cat, Violet, who watched her intently, waiting to be petted. Cohen-Mitchell, however, didn't seem to notice. She was caught up in the past, recalling memories of learning to read with her Polish grandfather.

"He was an immigrant from Poland who never learned to read or write in English and I remember when I was a little girl reading children's books with him and we were both practicing our English," she said, tucking her feet up underneath her, sinking deeper into the couch. "Looking back, I wonder if that experience with him is kind of what propelled me into my work with literacy and development."

Most of her answers come with an anecdote, a story about one of the endless adventures she has had abroad, a side-effect of her wanderlust gene.

From her childhood in suburban Massachusetts to her countless travels abroad working in education, Cohen-Mitchell said these experiences have served her

Restaurant/Theater Combo Proposed for Beltway Mall

by Mary Moien

A 100-seat restaurant could be part of an eight-theater movie house at the Beltway Plaza shopping center if a liquor license can be obtained. This proposal was sent to the Greenbelt City Council at its March 9 meeting by Marc "Kap" Kapastin representing the mall. Also at that meeting council received an update on delays to the opening of the Greenbelt Theater at Roosevelt Center and held a wide-ranging discussion of proposed changes to truck parking regulations put forth in an ordinance for council consideration. ACE awards presented at the meeting and other council considerations will be reported in a future issue.

Beltway Plaza

Kapastin briefed council on plans for the conversion of the Academy Stadium Theaters to a Studio Movie Grill. He is pursuing an amendment to current state regulations to allow the proposed facility to obtain a liquor license. Studio Movie Grill is a Dallas-based operator of 15 movie/restaurant locations across the country. The company plans to expand to 10 new locations including one at Beltway Plaza.

Kapastin described how movie venues are changing and how locating a Studio Movie Grill in the plaza would enhance the whole mall. It would then be on the cutting edge of movie changes.

Proposed are a 100-seat restaurant plus eight movie theaters updated with reclining seats, tables for food and beverages and assigned ticket seating. Patrons could eat in the restaurant either before or after a show or have food served to them at their seats. Each theater will have a waitstaff.

Alcohol

Kapastin said that two theaters in Montgomery County now serve alcohol. The one most similar to the one being proposed in Greenbelt is the new IPic Theater located at the new Pike and Rose Center in North Bethesda.

Going Green

The library has embraced new technology currently available for copying documents through its Library Document Station. The LDS has assumed the copier function by providing library patrons with the ability to scan their documents to: (1) send to a smartphone (when equipped with a QR reader app), (2) send to an email account, (3) save to a personal USB drive, (4) save to Google Drive (via a personal Google account) or (5) print to the public black and white printer (using a credit/debit card for payment @ $0.15 per page). Except for printing, these options allow customers to take advantage of green alternatives to the copy process.

50 Years Ago . . .
Policeman Delivers Baby

by Tom Jones

Excerpts selected from the News Review published on March 4, 1965.

“Thomas Galifaro, 14-C Crescent, of the Greenbelt Police Department, delivered a baby girl on Thursday night, February 25. Galifaro, who is also a member of the Volunteer Fire Department and Rescue Squad, was at the firehouse when the emergency call came in. He responded immediately, and ‘just barely had time to put on the rubber gloves.’”

In the same issue:

• “The city’s recent appeal of the rezoning of the Jaeger Tract for high-rise apartments was rejected by the Court of Appeals on the grounds that the city was not an ‘aggrieved party.’” Eventually the tract became the site of Westchester Park apartment and townhouse development.

• “The new [1965] Maryland license plates will be gold with black letters, and will cost Maryland car owners $15 for cars weighing 3,700 pounds or less, or $23 for cars weighing over 3,700 pounds.”

• “City Manager James Giese reported to the council a communication from the State Roads Commission to the effect that no new traffic signals would be approved pending a statewide review of the payment arrangements for traffic signals. Several councilmen asked whether this meant that installation of a left-turn signal at the intersection of Kenilworth Avenue and Greenbelt Road will be postponed.” [That intersection has since been rebuilt into an overpass, where 10 lanes of Greenbelt Road cross over 6 lanes of Kenilworth Avenue.]

• “The Paint Branch Unitarian Church, which began ten years ago as a small group meeting in a University of Maryland building to hear services piped in from the downtown All Souls’ Unitarian Church, will dedicate its new church building on Sunday, March 7th.”

• “Wonder of Wonders: Public meetings are more often endured than enjoyed: all too often, speakers stray off their subjects into dull monologues that prolong the expected closing hour. It is therefore a great pleasure to point to an exception. The hearing conducted by the county’s delegation to the Maryland State Assembly on February 24 was one of the best ever held in this area. There wasn’t a dull moment all evening...”

Obituaries

Robin Jean Corbin

Former Greenbelter Robin Jean Corbin, 58, of Tennis, Fla., died on February 16, 2015, at the home of her sister Terry in Luray, Va. Robin, who grew up in Greenbelt, graduated from Parkdale High School. Over 25 years ago she moved to Florida with her sons Bryan and Boyd Bethany.

The Corbin family lived in the same Southway Court that is home to the Earl Bailey family and pioneer Greenbelter Shirley Gray Bailey (Earl's mother). Other former residents of that court, like the Miller and Schultz families, still keep up with each other through Facebook, fondly remembering the "old days" of Greenbelt.

Ms. Corbin is survived by her sisters Terry Nebel and Pam Corbin, brother Mickey Corbin, sons Bryan and Boyd Bethany and six grandchildren.

Band to Honor Keith Marshall on March 29

The Greenbelt Concert Band will present a memorial concert in honor of long-time tuba player and Greenbelt resident Keith Marshall on Sunday, March 29 at 2 p.m. at the American Legion.

Marshall played in numerous bands around the Washington area during his lifetime. At one time he stated that he remembered having played for over 300 wedding receptions.

The Keith Marshall Memorial Concert Program will include musical pieces to commemorate many of Marshall's activities during his lifetime. Some pieces to be included are: Solo Pomposo, tuba solo performed by Norman Cary; Victory at Sea (symphonic scenario) by Richard Rodgers; Dixieland Jamboree by John Warrington; American Patrol, in the Glenn Miller Big Band style; and Armed Forces Salute by Bob Lowden. There is no charge for attendance.

Marshall loved music and was an avid tuba player, string bassist and all-around supporter of music in Greenbelt. He played tuba in many of Greenbelt's Labor Day Parades as a part of Rudy Adler's Dixieland Band.

Marshall enlisted in the U.S. Navy after college and served aboard the USS Denebola, reaching the rank of lieutenant in the reserves. Marshall was also chief of Zoonosis Control for the Maryland Department of Health when he retired in 1989. He will be buried at sea, according to his wife, Martha. The two lived in Greenbelt for over 40 years. Martha still resides on Woodland Way.

Astronomical Society Talks Telescopes

The March meeting of the Astronomical Society will feature a presentation by Dr. Peter C. Chen on A New Way to Make Telescopes. He will discuss the development and current status of making mirrors and telescopes. The primary application is for future missions in space and on the Moon, but the technology also has unique capabilities for use in large ground-based observatories and for amateur astronomy.

This technology has all the right buzzwords, including nanotechnology, active optics, adaptive optics, 3D printing, smart materials, smart structures, low cost rapid fabrication, large and extremely large apertures, low areal density and super-smooth surfaces. Despite the fancy terms, this is basically a simple process that does not require exotic materials or equipment. Chen will explain how it is done, what is currently being done and what kind of exciting things can be done in the future.

Chen is an astrophysicist at the Goddard Space Flight Center and an adjunct research professor in the department of physics at the Catholic University of America. He received a Bachelor of Science degree from the University of Toronto, Canada and a Ph.D. in astronomy from Case Western Reserve University in Cleveland.

The meeting will be held Thursday, March 26 at 7:30 p.m. in the planetarium of the Howard B. Owens Science Center, 9601 Greenbelt Rd., Lanham (adjacent to DuVal High School). All are welcome. This presentation was originally scheduled for February. There is no charge. The meeting will be cancelled without notice if the Prince Georges County schools are closed.

Teacher Open House At Aviation Museum

ERHS Kicks Off Japanese Sister School Exchange

On Monday, March 16 Eleanor Roosevelt High School (ERHS) held a welcome ceremony to kick off their new Japanese Sister Exchange Program with Atsugi High School located in Kanagawa Prefecture, Japan.

Supervisor of the High School Education Division for the Kanagawa Prefectural Board of Education, Noboru Ukita, along with several other members of the Kanagawa Board of Education Group, joined ERHS staff, Prince George's County Public Schools (PGCPS) administrators, and Director of International Affairs for the Office of the Secretary of State, Anna Yankova, at a welcome ceremony for the new program. At the ceremony, PGCPS and the Kanagawa Board of Education signed a letter of intent that will uphold a memorandum of understanding signed by former Governor of Maryland Martin O'Malley and Kanagawa Prefecture Governor Yuji Kuroiwa last year.

The Japanese Sister Exchange Program began this school year and was developed to encourage students to share their love of science globally. In February, students from Atsugi High School participated in ERHS's science fair. The hope is that the students participate in their sister school's annual science fair and have an opportunity to collaborate on research projects that focus on various world problems.

Condolences to the family and friends of Gary R. Stenhouse, who died March 12, 2015. He served in Greenbelt as assistant city manager to James Giese before leaving in 1971 to become city manager of Killingly, Conn. He had a distinguished career managing communities in four New England states. At the time of his death, he was semi-retired and serving as interim city manager of Berwick, Maine.

Sympathy to the Aichele and Fitzgerald families and their friends on the death on March 8, 2015, of Terrance F. (“Terry”) Aichele, 72, of Prince Frederick, Md., after a long struggle with brain cancer. He was a retired 30-year Philadelphia firefighter and was the husband of former longtime Greenbelter Maureen Fitzgerald Aichele.

We were sorry to hear of the death from cancer of former Greenbelter Robin Corbin, 58, on February 16, 2015 in Luray, Va., where she was being cared for by her sister Terry. The sad news was sent to us from Florida by her lifelong friend Jo Anne Miller Streitmatter. The Corbin, Miller and Bailey families all grew up together in the 1 court of Southway and have remained close throughout the years.

Congratulations to:
After all the disruptions caused by snow and ice this winter, it’s encouraging to hear about the Eleanor Roosevelt High School debate team’s win in a national contest, and the fine season that the ERHS basketball teams – both boys and girls – have been having. And how about those Lady Terps! It seems that Spring is really coming at last.

Greenbelt Animal Shelter

550-A Crescent Road 301-474-6124
Open Wednesdays 4-7pm and Saturdays 9am-12pm

Buddy is a 15 year old Beagle who was brought to the shelter because his older owner could no longer care for him. He is a happy-go-lucky dog who likes short walks, dog treats (he’s a Beagle, of course!), afternoon naps and getting attention. Buddy’s blood test results were good, but he has some trouble walking up and down a long flight of stairs. Otherwise, Buddy is looking for a wonderful place to retire and give someone all his love and happy affection!

Macy was surrendered at the shelter when her owners moved back to their native country. At 3 years old, Macy is a friendly but quiet cat with a gorgeous, smooth coat and bright green eyes. Macy does well with other cats, but would be okay by herself, too. She likes to give nose kisses and enjoys being petted.

well, giving her the skills necessary to take on her current position as chief of programming and evaluation for the Peace Corps in Washington, D.C.

She manages a staff of 25, working closely with a variety of sector specialists in areas such as education to develop, manage and guide numerous Peace Corps programs.

“I love my staff, I love my job,” Cohen-Mitchell said. “Going to work every day is such a pleasure.”

“Joanie and I have worked together for two years now. It’s been a pleasure to work with someone who is as dynamic a thinker and as collaborative a colleague as Joanie,” Lisa Cohen, chief of training at the Peace Corps, said. “Besides significant experience in international development, she brings to her work creativity, knowledge, energy and a real commitment to the mission of the Peace Corps.”

Collaborative

Cohen-Mitchell is currently working on a collaborative initiative with the Peace Corps that Michelle Obama called Let Girls Learn, which aims to expand access to education for girls around the world. Cohen-Mitchell, however, said she doesn’t measure success based on the size of the program.

“We do these big projects, like Let Girls Learn, that are incredible, but I try not to only think about that stuff,” she said. “It’s about the small changes. That’s what members of the Peace Corps do every day; they go out and they help kids read. That’s what it’s all about, helping that one kid learn to read.”

Though she went into college as an engineering major, she quickly switched to education. “My professors called me by my number, not my name,” she said. That’s when I realized it was not the place for me.”

She earned her bachelor’s degree in early childhood development from the University of Vermont and master’s and doctoral degrees from the University of Massachusetts. She began working with the Peace Corps when she was 22 as a volunteer sent to Haiti.

“I didn’t know anything of the world,” Cohen-Mitchell said. “But I loved it. I actually helped deliver a baby while I was there who is my godchild now.”

After being evacuated from Haiti after 14 months, Cohen-Mitchell extended her service to Paraguay, where she served for three years. It was an unexpected choice for someone who grew up in a family that didn’t travel and who was not exposed to a variety of careers, she said.

“The possibilities of what you could be in my little Jewish community in Massachusetts were kind of limited. You were a doctor, you were a lawyer, you were an accountant, you were a dentist. I remember when I went to university finding out there were so many choices. There was this whole other way to live.”

Before returning to the Peace Corps in 2012 as a literacy specialist, Cohen-Mitchell furthered her work in International Development by coordinating programs both abroad and in the U.S.

Literacy Training

Among this work was development of a training program for disabled women in Central and South America with the Literacy Training Institute, creation of literacy programs to be used in areas in the Caribbean for the Bernard Van Leer Foundation’s Caribbean Child Support Initiative, and planning a social services agency called The Gray House that offers things such as a food pantry and adult education courses in low-income areas in Springfield, Mass.

In addition to her consulting work, she taught undergraduate and graduate courses at universities in Massachusetts and Vermont and has been published nine times.

Cohen-Mitchell said her secret to managing a tricky work-life balance is the unwavering support of a husband willing to do more than scrub the occasional dish.

She met Tim Cohen-Mitchell (they took each other’s names) during graduate school. Soon after, they had their son, 12-year-old Noah, and started a life together. Wanting their child to grow up with a strong parental presence, she slowed down her career for roughly 10 years to focus on raising her son.

“I had this sort of smattering of work, but for someone like me who really associates herself with work, it was hard,” she said. “I would definitely say this was the most unexciting part of my life. I mean the parenting part was great but the professional part was hard. Not traveling, not being anywhere else.”

She was then offered a position at the Peace Corps headquarters in Washington, D.C. It was an opportunity worth leaving the home they had created in Massachusetts, she said.

“When I was offered the Peace Corps job, we decided Tim would be the one to work part-time. We decided it was my turn to work that main job,” she said. “He is really great. He cooks, cleans, sees Noah off to school; he is just unwaveringly supportive.”

Professional Success

In addition to a strong support system, she attributes her professional success to hard work and openness. “Most people don’t know this, but I am actually a huge introvert. I’m kind of proof that you don’t have to be the loud, flashy person to be successful. You can keep your head down, be open to new things and just work hard,” she said.

When she’s not in the office, Cohen-Mitchell loves yoga, cooking and biking. “I bike 19 miles each way to work every day; it’s why I don’t look fifty,” she said with a laugh.

She is also passionate about community, something she said she found in Greenbelt.

“When we were first looking for a place near D.C., we looked all over until a friend of mine suggested Greenbelt,” Cohen-Mitchell said. “The second I was here I just thought ‘this is it.’ We love our neighbors and how close everything is. It really does have everything.”

While she said she would love to live abroad again in the future, perhaps in Africa, for now she has finally found her dream job.

“The Peace Corps changed the trajectory of my life,” Cohen-Mitchell said, a warm smile etching its way across her face as she picks up Violet, pulling the purring cat close to her chest. “So to be working with them again after all this time, it really is like coming home.”

group of people that are looking out to 2035 and 2050,” Scolese said. “Where do we want to be? What kind of missions do we want to do, what kind of science is out there?”

“And that’s far enough away that you can be really looking at very complex and interesting questions. But that isn’t the whole story. I want them to also look at what we need to do today, in the next five years, to prepare us for 2035,” he said.

Last September, for the first time, a GSFC space craft, MAVEN, went into orbit around Mars Scolese said. “We’ve had a lot of instruments go to Mars, but this is the first spacecraft that’s gone to Mars and it’s doing something really different – it actually dips into the atmosphere. It did its first dip about a week ago.”

GSFC also works with satellites. One such satellite, DSCOVR, is valuable to Earth because of its solar storm-detecting capabilities.

DSCOVR, like other satellites designed to detect solar storms, is about a million miles from Earth. Because solar storm energetic particles travel slower than the speed of light, Scolese said, these satellites allow scientists to see the storm about an hour before it reaches Earth. They can then tell power and communications companies to expect and prepare for the storm.

Earth Image

“DSCOVR also is going to look at the Earth and, for the first time in 40 years, is going to give us an image of the Earth like the Apollo astronauts saw. So we’ll see the whole Earth disc. And unlike the Apollo astronauts, we’ll every once in a while get to see the moon cross in front of the Earth.”

Scolese said construction of the James Webb Space Telescope, a successor to the Hubble Space telescope, is in progress in Greenbelt and will be virtually complete this year.

Despite sequestration, a cap on the federal budget that cuts spending, Scolese said NASA and Goddard have not been hit too harshly, although they did notice the change. “The impact to us, however, is it creates a lot of uncertainty for us. So it’s very difficult for us to plan our missions and activities.”

GSFC will also host its first open house since 2011 on Saturday, September 19. That date coincides with International Observe the Moon Night.

Greenbelt Labor Day Festival Achieves Non-profit Status

by Barbara Simon

The Greenbelt Labor Day Festival Committee has now completed the process of becoming a non-profit organization. The committee believes this new status will enable it to seek grants helping fund community activities that complement the carnival, professional music acts on stage, food concessions and other booths managed by local groups.

These include events that have been part of the Festival since its beginning, such as the parade and art and photo shows, as well as more recent initiatives like the crafts fair, the Rising Stars featuring teen bands and the Greenbelt Museum’s Retro Fair. The Festival will also be able to encourage contributions from individuals and businesses by assuring that their donations will be tax-deductible.

A special thank you goes to past Labor Day Festival Treasurer Jon Gardner for his work and dedication in obtaining the 501(c) (3) status.

The Greenbelt Labor Day Festival has always been produced by an all-volunteer committee. For information on how to serve, visit www.greenbeltlaborday.com or attend the group’s meetings held the second Tuesday of every month at 7:30 p.m. at the Community Center. The committee is currently looking for volunteers to be part of the Grants Committee.

The Studio Movie Grill company indicates that the Greenbelt area has the demographics they seek including a high median income. Kapastin said the company is set to sign a lease as soon as the liquor license is obtained. An amendment to the liquor license regulations to add this specific location has already been submitted.

Councilmembers had a number of comments. Councilmember Judith Davis reminded Kapastin that the size of signs facing Greenbelt Road has been a continuing issue with the council. He responded that he recognizes that any leases are subject to the permit process.

A question arose about the age of staff if alcohol is served. The sense of the discussion was that those under 21 can serve alcohol in restaurants even if they cannot consume it. Another issue put on the table was carding for alcohol, indicating that carding of everyone is preferred. Also mentioned was the desire to hire local residents.

Council took no action on the proposal at the meeting.

Greenbelt Theater

City Manager Michael McLaughlin provided a brief status update on reopening the Greenbelt theater. He said that a few more issues (sink and popcorn machine) have arisen and that the soft opening of the theater will probably be pushed back two weeks making the opening date possibly the second week in April.

Parking, Vehicle

Council had directed staff to evaluate Chapter 11 of the Greenbelt City Code as it relates to parking regulations, particularly parking restrictions based on vehicle size, weight and class. In addition (since the code was being reviewed) city staff recommended increased fines and strengthening enforcement regulations for vehicles that are unregistered, disabled, out-of-state or have been the subject of multiple violations.

The staff recommendations had been put forth in an amending ordinance introduced at the previous council meeting and now before council for second reading and final passage. Also proposed was new language to regulate parking of commercial vehicles in residential zones and the operation of curbstoning (vehicle sales from residential locations). Celia Craze, director of Planning and Community Development, presented information about the proposal.

Much discussion surrounded this topic. Mayor Emmett Jordan summarized the issues that had originally brought this topic to the fore. A resident who was moving had parked a moving van on the street overnight and had received a citation. He petitioned to be allowed to park overnight. Craze said that in reviewing the code and the various classes of vehicles, it was decided to align the city code with state code.

Various councilmembers disagreed with the proposed code revisions. Councilmember Rodney Roberts said that the truck in question would still receive a citation due to its size. Councilmember Ed Putens commented that moving can take a few days; why not just issue a warning?

Craze said the city must be fair and staff does not have the time to investigate why trucks are parked and for how long. Overnight parking of commercial vehicles is forbidden on residential streets, she said.

Jordan said he thought the standardization with the state code was a good move. However, he didn’t like increasing fees.

This is a “horrible ordinance” with regard to commercial vehicles, Roberts said. The new codes would decrease the weight of trucks allowed on a residential street.

Greenbelt resident Frank Gervasi expressed concern about one segment of the new code relating to half-ton trucks. In his opinion, he said, it will prevent many residents who own and use half-ton trucks for business purposes from parking them on city streets. He recommended instead that all of Section 11-42.1 of the code that provides for restrictions on half-ton trucks be deleted.

After more discussion, councilmembers agreed that sections would be rewritten and brought back for reconsideration at a future meeting.

These are just a few of the great buys you will find at Co-op this week!

Seniors Flock to Rock at City's 18th Annual Ice Cream Social

by Naema Ahmed

Over 60 people came to the Greenbelt Community Center on Friday, March 13 for the annual senior ice cream social featuring oldies rock and roll band Retro-Rockets. “I think we broke my attendance record today,” said Karen Haseley, the event’s organizer.

The event was hosted by the Greenbelt Recreation Department. It was initiated to inform people about classes and programs offered, but since then it’s evolved into an annual social event, said Haseley.

Haseley has been organizing this event every year since it started about 18 years ago. This is the third year the social has featured the Retro-Rockets for entertainment. “Everybody loved them so much I thought we’d invite them back again,” said Haseley.

The band played an hour-long set with a variety of hits from the 50s, 60s and 70s, including Stevie Wonder and Dion’s Run-around Sue.

About seven years ago, two founding members of the Retro-Rockets were told to make a rock and roll band while they were part of a church praise band. Since then members have changed over time through personal connections and ads on Craigslist.

“We always love playing here because it’s always a great audience,” said Iris Hirsch, who sings lead vocals in the Retro-Rockets.

Wanda Banks of New Carrollton came by the Community Center to sign her nephew up for a music program and decided to check out the social after one of the guests invited her in.

“I loved the band, I sang along and it was wonderful,” said Banks. She said she picked up a book of programs at the Community Center and looks forward to future events.

“It was fun to dance to their music, which makes every song a favorite,” said Emily Norton Martinez de Brace, who is new to Greenbelt. She said she enjoyed meeting new people.

JoAnne Pritchard and Anna Pritchard were guests who attended last year as well and came because they heard the Retro-Rockets were playing again.

“Even though I’ve lived here for 20 years, this is the first time I’ve been here but not the last,” said Barbara Bjanes. “Now I want them to have this more often.”

Franklin Park apartment complex dropped by a very significant 24 percent. Crime in Greenbelt Center also dropped by more than 26 percent and accounted for only 15 percent of all crimes in 2014. That smaller percent may be due in part to that sector not having any major retail facilities.

Conversely, in Greenbelt East there was an eight percent increase in the number of crimes committed in 2014 as compared to 2013. While the number of crimes against persons remained about the same, there were significant increases in the numbers of breaking and enterings and motor vehicle thefts. Overall, 25 percent of all city crimes against persons and 37 percent of the property crimes were committed in Greenbelt East in 2014.

Camera Violations

In its monthly Statistical Report, which is accessible on the city website, greenbeltmd.gov, statistics are available for a wide variety of other police and enforcement related activities. For the year 2014, all but one of these measures is down from the previous year. Speed camera violations, at 12,599, were up 55 percent, but that is primarily due to some of the cameras not being operational for the entire 2013 year.

The worst spot for speeding and conversely the best money-making spot for the city is the 5900 block of Cherrywood Lane where 4,615 motorists were photographed speeding north (to catch a Metro train?) and 1,973 were caught heading south. The downhill slope on Greenbelt Road in front of Eleanor Roosevelt High School was another good spot for photographing speeders with 3,112 being caught in 2014. Conversely, only 278 were caught speeding up the hill. Another lucrative spot for the city to photograph speeders in 2014 was going north on Mandan Road in the 7700 block, yielding 1,490 citations. Other camera locations are on Crescent Road near Northway, westbound Hanover Parkway in the 7700 block and northbound in the 9100 block of Edmonston Road.

Red light camera violations are on the decline with the 5,022 citations issued in 2014 being five percent fewer than in 2013. The prime locations for scofflaws are westbound Greenbelt Road at Cherrywood Lane (1,342), Greenbelt Road at Mandan Road (1,270 for both directions) and northbound Kenilworth Avenue at the two I-95 off ramps (1,452 combined). Also be wary of the light at Cherrywood Lane if you are headed north on Kenilworth where 958 revenue-producing photographs were taken.

Other Data

Many of the other statistical data provided by the police department were down significantly (see Crime Statistics table). For some of these, the cause may be fewer law violators. For others, it may be due to less police enforcement activity. Significantly lower numbers were reported for calls for police service, traffic stops, arrests, traffic and parking tickets as well as driving under the influence of alcohol and other substances and other traffic arrests. Down about seven percent were the number of traffic accidents and injuries resulting from accidents – unfortunately, one accident in 2014 resulted in a fatality.

Workshop Examines Writing About Race

The University of Maryland’s Clarice Smith Performing Arts Center is sponsoring a special program at Busboys & Poets in Hyattsville entitled, Living in Color: Writing Through the Lens of Race. This free discussion and workshop with award-winning poet Tim Seibles will take place on Wednesday, March 25 at 5:30 p.m.

The workshop will briefly examine a few poems that address the experience of living with skin color in this society, after which participants will discuss the need for and potential of such writing. This will be followed by writing exercises that will facilitate honest engagement with the subject from many perspectives. Because everyone is affected by racialized thinking, it is Seibles’ hope that people from all across the color spectrum will attend.
